DAREDEVILS

by Father Doughty

I confess I am afraid of heights. On occasion, I have been able to muster the courage to climb a mountain or two, but for the most part I am happier at sea level. Of late, I have become fascinated by those extreme athletes who jump off cliffs in specially fashioned "flying" suits that allow them to glide almost all the way down to the bottom before a parachute gently lowers them to the ground. I find this vicarious experience both frightening and thrilling.

These modern thrill seekers are apostles for daredevilry. They claim that intensity of life increases with every moment that they flirt with death. Despite the danger, and the memories of friends who lost their lives doing the same, nothing else seems to make for a fuller life.

There may be wisdom in their madness. Anthropologist Ernest Becker believed that the modern western psyche, conditioned by a culture of health and all the medical advances that have extended average life expectancy, cannot accept the reality of death. By evading any thought of it, men and women, he reasoned, would never take the kind of risks that are necessary to venture a meaningful life. To enjoy life truly, fully, one needed to face death and accept its inevitability. Becker was not a Christian and so could not say whether belief in the Resurrection gave humanity a new perspective and a reason to say that life is good and meaningful simply because God invested it with eternal value. Yet flirting with death is something Christians do each Lent, and that dalliance enables us to live more fully, more happily.

Lent and its disciplines really are about flirting with death by making a commitment to die to oneself. In fasting and penance and almsgiving, we become acutely aware that man cannot worship both God and mammon (Luke 16:13), that whoever loses his life for Jesus' sake will find it (Matthew 10:35), that it profits a man nothing to gain the world but lose his life (Matthew 16:26). If for a moment we think this kind of dying is crazy, we might think of how readily we would give our lives for those who are dear to us, and how readily God demonstrated his love for us in that, while we were still sinners, Christ died for us (Romans 5:8). Dying to oneself is the precondition for a life with God in Eternity; taking up the cross and following Jesus brings us to the Resurrection. But it also enhances our life here and now. True men and women of faith are not unlike those daredevils jumping off mountains in their flying suits.

They face death everyday and in particular in Lent by dying to themselves – and their lives are full and meaningful because of it.

RECONCILIATION MONDAY

April 10, 2017

3:00PM - 9:00PM

Cardinal Dolan designated April 10, 2017 as Reconciliation Monday for Lent. All parishes in the Archdiocese will have priests available to hear confessions from 3:00PM-9:00 PM. Confessions will be at Saint Thomas.

WE NEED YOU ... TO BE A LECTOR

The role of the Minister of the Word, also known as the lector, is to minister/serve both God and his people by proclaiming the scriptural reflections of the Church each Sunday. The candidate should be a baptized member of the parish who has received the sacrament of Confirmation and attends Mass regularly. She or he must take time to prepare and reflect on the readings in advance of the Sunday celebration of the liturgy so that the word of God will be proclaimed with familiarity, reverence, and love. Some bit of awe in having a role in the sacred mysteries is helpful, but will likely be acquired over time!

Interested? Contact Chris Steiner

at cmscas18@aol.com or call 845-534-0598.

A brief training will be offered in May; with the possibility of serving at two Masses each month.
